BEST UMPIRES FAST THINKERS

Slow-thinking Players Cause Trouble—No Telling What a Bonehead Will Do.

Successful umpires think faster than the best players, says Jack Haskell, now chief of the Western league staff and formerly an American league arbitrator. To support his assertion he tells some stories of the game.

"The slow thinkers produce more trouble for the umpires," he said recently, "than the men who are quick witted. There's no telling what a bonehead may attempt to pull off. The successful diamond judge must work his gray machine about two knots faster than the heaviest domed player."

"I once saw Slick O'Loughlin give an exhibition of lightning judgment when I consider about as good as I ever witnessed."

"Long Tom Hughes of Washington was getting a frightful beating in the old White Sox park," Larry Schaffy was in charge of the Senators. He went behind the grandstand to get a pitcher then warning up. Before Schaffy got back three Senators fanned and Hughes returned to the mound.

"The first man up was Fleider Jones, and he drove one safely through the pitcher's box. The ball went on to center field, there being no one at second base to intercept it. O'Loughlin noted that Schaffy had not returned nor had a substitute been put in, so he ordered Jones to return. The later argued, but O'Loughlin insisted that baseball could not be played with eight men on one side."

"A few weeks ago Bill Klem told me of a decision he made in Philadelphia late this season. Becker was on third, Knabe on second and Lobert at first base with two out. Of course the runners started from the bases when Lavender of the Cubs was pitching the ball after the count had gone to three and two. Knabe had a long lead off second and planned to be at Becker's heels in the dash for the plate."

"Lavender failed to get the ball over and Paskert walked, thereby forcing all the runners to advance. Knabe tried to sink back to third, but Catcher Needham saw him and threw to Paskert, who touched out the runner before he could regain the base. Of course Becker was forced in, but the rules do not say anything about how long a player may take to complete his journey. Just when a wrangle was impending Klem declared that Becker had crossed the plate before the ball was put on Knabe. That removed the play from the argumentative stage. The umpire didn't try to unravel any tangle."

"What are you batting?" asked the court.

"Two eighty-seven," replied Schramm with pride.

"Discharged. You can't be bad with a batting average like that," said Judge Sullivan.

WRESTLING THE JAPANESE GAME

Baseball But Little Known
Among the Common People of Country.

Wrestling is the sport which baseball will have to overcome before it becomes the diversion of the everyday youth in Japan. Japanese college boys are playing the diamond game, but among the common people it is still little known.

Wrestling is the native sport of the Japanese. It is strictly a game. The Japanese game of wrestling is not for use in case of attack. Jiu Jitsu is an entirely different affair.

There are forty-eight standard holds used by Japanese wrestlers and a full count whenever any part of the body above the knee touches the mat.

Against wrestling, understood by every Japanese and surrounded by tradition, baseball must compete. It is making it, but so far has gained ground only among the colleges, where it is the rage, as football is here.

Crowds attend the games, especially when American teams, such as have visited Japan recently, are taking part, but they are more like the football crowds in this country than the baseball mobs.

Japan is perhaps peculiar in that there is no native game of ball except a sort of an association football played by boys. Girls have always used a soft cotton ball to toss about, but a game played with a ball by men is a new thing.

Tennis is now played in Japan, many girls taking part. There are Japanese boxers in America, but the game itself would not appeal to Japanese in general.
